Ten Time Bombs: Defusing the Most Explosive Pressures Teenagers Face, Sacrificing Sex at Its Best for Sex Too Soon

Five people in our family - three of them teenagers. Each one doing their own thing in a different room of the house. My Mission Impossible - somehow get them all together in the living room for some family time. Good luck!

But what's the first thing they do when that Mission Impossible theme starts? Light a match! So I do - to start a fire in our fireplace. Of course, first I secretly turn down the thermostat on this cold winter night. As the house is getting colder, the living room is getting warmer. One by one, every shivering member of the family drifts into the room muttering, "Man, is it cold in this house!"

I love our fireplace. But our youngest son probably loves the fireplace most. Fortunately, he has never reached the point where he wants a fire too much. Imagine if I came home some night and smelled smoke coming from his room. I would be in a panic, and I should be in a panic - there's no fireplace upstairs!

"Son, do you smell smoke up there?"
"Yup."

"Where's it coming from?"

"Well, Dad - you know how I love those fires?"

"Yeah..." "Well I decided to build a fire in my room."

"But, Son, there's no fireplace in your room!"

Fire is nice - when it's in the right place. It makes you warm and cozy. But that same fire outside of the fireplace will burn you and destroy things that matter to you.

Just like the fire of sex.

Sex in its right place, in its right time will warm and beautify your life. But when you play with sex outside the fireplace it was made for, you get burned, and irreplaceable treasures get destroyed.

So many young people are deciding to try the "fire" without the "fireplace" and, in the process, giving up more than they could ever imagine. Having sex too soon is one of those ten time bombs that can do serious damage to your future.

Designer Love

"What are sex and love going to mean to me?"

That is one of the most important questions a teenager can answer. The question is so personal that no one else can or should answer it for you. Your parents can't answer it for you (even though they would like to go out on your dates with you, if they could). Your church or synagogue can't answer it for you. And it's too personal for you to let any friends give you an answer. So much of your future love and happiness is wrapped up in whether or not you make the right choice about what sex will mean to you.

If you get it right, sex can give you a life full of closeness, caring, and ultimate relationship. If you get it wrong, you will end up - as all too many people found out too late - with disappointment, regrets, loneliness, and maybe even disease.

Now, it's obvious that what "everybody" is doing isn't working. Too many people are ending up feeling used, lonely, and disillusioned. And the relationships our "go for it!" world is producing tell us that something is messed up. There is one divorce for every new marriage in America these days. If you had a machine where every other product it made broke, wouldn't you get a new machine? Well, our dating-and-mating "machine" is manufacturing "lifetime" relationships in which every other one breaks! Any thinking young person can see that there must be something better than this rush to physical relationships.

So, where do you look for that "something better"? For some honest help that will keep you from making the mistakes that ruin sex and love?

How about checking with the Inventor of sex and love? Who would that be? In our culture, it is easy to conclude that the authorities on sex are found in media: movies, television, magazines, music, and certainly the internet – where sex and sexual images are everywhere. Or, there are some teenage guys who probably think they invented sex!

If we’re not careful, it is possible to allow our culture to define what is acceptable when it comes to the important issue of sex.

No, we cannot look to our culture to give us our cues when it comes to sex. The starting point to have sex at its best is this simple, maybe surprising fact: God invented sex, and the Inventor knows best.
No one knows as much about sex and how it is meant to be as God does. It only makes sense. If you have a question about your Chevrolet, contact Chevrolet - they made it. If you have a question about your iPhone, contact Apple - they made it. And if you want to know how to have the best of sex and love, find out what God says ... He made it!

My friend Mel keeps his garden protected by having a fence around it. The fence isn't there to keep everyone from enjoying it. It's there to keep it protected from unwanted animal visitors.

That's why the Creator of sex put the fence of marriage around it - not to ruin it, but to protect it. In His "manual on life and love" - the Bible - God describes the place He designated to keep sex special: "Marriage should be honored by all, and the marriage bed kept pure" (Hebrews 13:4).

The Inventor of sex says He designed it to be kept inside the fence called marriage. Jesus Christ described sex at its best when He told us, "At the beginning of creation, God 'made them male and female': 'For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and be united to his wife, and the two will become one flesh: So they are no longer two, but one. Therefore what God has joined together, let man not separate'" (Mark 10:6-9).
Jesus was describing what most of us really want deep down inside - a lifetime love we can count on with someone we are totally committed to and who is totally committed to us. And He said an important part of the love between them is a sexual bond they have never experienced with anyone else.

Marriage is the fireplace where sex belongs. When "two become one flesh" within the fireplace of married love, sex warms your life in a uniquely beautiful way. But just like fire, when you play with sex outside the fireplace of marriage, you get tragically burned. The winds of passion will take you farther than you ever planned to go, keep you longer than you ever planned to stay, and leave you in a place where you never wanted to end up.

When the Failure Rate for Condoms Is 100%

It used to be that even married couples were a little embarrassed to talk about condoms. Now everybody is talking about them, and they're selling them right up front in the drugstore with the bubble gum and the chocolate bars! In some places, schools are even handing them out to students like Band-Aids. It seems as if the community is assuming most kids will have sex, it's inevitable, so let's give them what they need to protect themselves.

The theory is that with a condom you can protect yourself from the consequences of sex outside of marriage: AIDS, sexually transmitted disease, or pregnancy. But these are only the selective consequences of premarital sex - the ones only some young people experience. Usually, you have heard about those consequences so much that you almost get dangerously immune to all the lectures. Many teenagers decide they will roll the dice anyway and say, "Hey, I'll take my chances. Those things probably won't happen to me."

Everyone who ever got back a positive HIV test or pregnancy test thought the same thing.

A lot of people are telling you about these selective consequences. But, chances are, no one is telling you about the universal consequences of sex before marriage. These are the consequences that happen to every person who has sex outside of marriage. No condom on earth can protect you from one of these universal consequences: damaging memories.
The Invasion of the Video Monsters!

"Do we have to?"

That was our youngest son's reaction whenever we pulled out the old family video of our trip to Alaska. For some reason, he wasn't excited about seeing himself again in all his twelve-year-old splendor. He was entering that phase when the "caterpillar" is starting to turn into a "butterfly" - and when most people are some "caterfly" or "butterpillar" intermediate life-form.

Also, the video has an abrupt ending - his fourteen-year-old brother was using the camcorder and didn’t know how to turn it off. Consequently, the picture is enough to make you seasick in your own living room as it races up and down over snowdrifts, boots, clouds, and unidentified flying objects. The reason my son hates it is because the audio features his high-pitched twelve-year-old voice squeaking in frustration- "Bro -- You're still filming!" Unfortunately for my youngest son, because it's on video, those precious memories will never go away.
Not all recorded memories are ones we want to replay. Especially when it comes to memories of physical relationships you had before you were married.

A result of sex that few people ever think about at the time - one that happens to every person who has sex outside God's fence - is damaging memories. Because sex was designed by God for one man with one woman in lifetime relationship, He made it so it creates powerful, long-lasting memories. But when you have sex outside of marriage, the video camera in your soul is still filming, recording indelible impressions. When you are making out or making love, you are making memories.

And those memories start playing back just when you don't want them to - in the intimacy of your sexual love with your husband or wife. At a time when you were meant to be thinking of only one person in the whole world, another relationship is invading the most intimate moments of your life. God designed sex so that each married couple would develop their own, never-before, never-like-this language of love with each other. But the replays of previous experiences introduce comparison, guilt, and mental adultery into what
Sex At Its Best

by Ron Hutchcraft

was supposed to be some of the most beautiful moments of your life.

Don't take sex outside the fireplace of marriage - when you do, you are making damaging memories that can spoil sex at its best.

You Threw It Out?

For a long time, our oldest son thought his grandmother had committed the unpardonable sin.

When I was a kid, I dug pop bottles out of a vacant lot, went to the corner store, got the deposit money for them, and spent it all on baseball cards. Many years later - long after pop bottles had turned to pop cans – my son went into baseball card collecting big time. He liked rare cards that could be turned into big bucks. Like the ones I had in my boyhood collection.

There was just one small problem. My mother threw them all out some years ago when we were moving. Well, my son eventually was able to forgive his grandmother. But the fact remains - she threw away something really valuable without even knowing it!
Lost treasure. It's sad - especially when it comes to what could have been sex and love at its best. Every night, somewhere in this country, young men and women are having sex before marriage - and, without knowing it, throwing away treasures that are very, very valuable. And like damaging memories, lost treasure is a consequence of sex outside God's fence that affects every person involved and that no condom on earth can protect you against.

How Sex is Like Scotch Tape

One treasure you lose with unmarried sex is your bondability. You can see bondability when you stick a piece of tape to something like the side of a desk. It sticks. It stays. But take that same piece of tape and stick it on the floor, then several pieces of furniture, then a carpet - and finally on the side of the desk again. This time it won't stick. It won't stay. It has lost something important - its bondability.

When God created sex, He created it with bonding power, to glue two people together "till death do us part." No matter how casual or serious the relationship, inside or outside of marriage, sex will bond people as if this were a forever relationship. That's the way sex was created - you cannot make it not bond the two people involved. Speaking of the most meaningless sex of all, the Designer says, "Do you not know that he who unites himself with a prostitute is one with her in body? For it is said, 'The two will become one flesh'" (1 Corinthians 6:16).

That man bonded with that prostitute in the same way sex was supposed to bond him with his wife. Every time you get sexually involved with someone, you are bonding, whether you realize it or not. And like that reused piece of tape, you are giving up a little of your bondability every time you have a sexual relationship. And that bondability is a treasure you will need as glue for your lifetime love. If you have bonded before you're married, you have used up some of your ability to give and receive real, lifetime love. No one is telling you that unmarried sex can cost you the precious treasure of your bondability. No one, that is, except the Inventor.
Maximum Excitement

Future trust is another treasure you can throw out as unknowingly as my mother threw out those valuable baseball cards. At the time your passions are pumping, you aren't thinking about what this might do to your marriage some day. But that consequence will last much longer than tonight's feelings of love. You won't realize until it's too late that tonight's "making love" is "trashing trust" for your future marriage.

You cannot have a stable marriage without trust and confidence that you and your partner will have only each other sexually. That trust is what allows you to totally relax in your partner's love and experience sex at its best.

Before you're married, it's so easy to say, "Hey, who cares about the fence of marriage? After all, we love each other - isn't that all that matters?" So, you tear down the fence to have sex. The problem comes when you are later married to someone who did not think the fence was worth waiting for. So if the fence wasn't important enough to keep him or her out, how can you be sure it will be important enough to keep him or her in?
Bondability and your future spouse's trust are treasures too valuable to trash. Beyond that, there is still another treasure you lose when the "fire" is "outside the fireplace."

The Excitement of the Unopened Gift

Christmas is always fun because of the excitement of the unopened gifts. Of course, we're all really curious about what's inside the beautifully wrapped packages, but to open them early can ruin Christmas. One year, a young boy I know opened all his gifts two weeks before Christmas. On Christmas morning, instead of racing to the tree, he listlessly sat by and opened his gifts without much joy. "Are you sick?" his concerned parents asked. "No," he replied. "I just opened my gifts early and ruined Christmas!"

With sex, "Christmas" is your wedding night. The Inventor designed sex to be one man with one woman opening their gift inside a lifetime commitment to each other. Everything else is unnatural love. And God meant for it to be incredibly exciting and satisfying. He basically said that in His Book - "May you rejoice in the wife of your youth....May her breasts satisfy you always, may you ever be captivated by her love" (Proverbs 5:18-19).

Now, someone will read that, get a curious look on their face, and ask, "Did God say that? Isn't that a little racy for God?" Of course not! He's the Inventor of sex! God thought up the male body, the female body, intercourse - it's all His idea. Once you're inside the fireplace of married love, God is saying, "Go for it!"

But what makes married love so exciting is that you have never loved anyone else in this way. There is an explosive excitement in knowing you have waited for each other, that you have a gift that you have saved exclusively for your lifetime lover. That is sex at its best!

God knows the frustration people experience when they love someone as they have never loved anyone else - but have nothing unique to give to say, "I love you forever!" They already gave it to someone else - and stole it from the one person who really should have gotten it. You can only give it the first time one time. God meant for it to be with your husband or wife.
In simple terms - it is worth the wait to have sex at its best.

The Sexual Secret You Need to Know

It's hard to think anything about sex is still a secret today, but there's one secret few people talk about. The ultimate unavoidable consequence of sex outside marriage is the judgment of God. His Word says, "For God will judge the adulterer and all the sexually immoral" (Hebrews 13:4).

One day we will stand before the One who gave us this wonder love - gift called sex and account for what we did with it. Society may not care if you have sex outside the fence, your family may never know, your feelings may tell you it's really okay, your friends may even congratulate you if you do, but your Creator has not changed His mind about sex and how He designed it to be!

God cares what you do with sex. He knows what you do with sex. He will never say it was okay outside of His marriage boundaries, and He will hold you accountable for what you do with His invention and the body He gave you. But judging
by Ron Hutchcraft

you is never His first choice. He would rather forgive you - and before we finish, you will understand how that can happen.

With these universal consequences of damaging memories, lost treasure, and the judgment of God, how can you keep sex special? You need to have a plan.

Strategies for Keeping Sex Special

Sex at its best is for those who make the commitment - that whatever you have done before today - from today on, you will reserve sex for the person you marry. Once you decide that's what you want, you have to face a very important and practical question: "How am I going to keep sex special - especially when I'm surrounded by people who aren't, and with desires that keep pushing me to give in?"

Good question. It deserves some good answers.

God wants us to keep our bodies special, to reserve ourselves for the best. That's why He says, "You should avoid sexual immorality ... each of you should learn to control his own body" (1 Thessalonians 4:3-4).

Avoid - like you avoid a skunk with his tail in the air - don't get anywhere close to going too far. And control - like a campfire - do not let your passions get to the point where they could take over.

God knows the power He built into our sexual desires, and like a fire, that power is useful when it's in its place, but destructive when it gets outside its boundaries. We need an aggressive plan to avoid sex too soon and to control the sexual desires inside us - before they become a raging inferno!

Step 1: Decide Your Line in Advance

Unfortunately, most young people do not think about where they will stop until they are all wrapped around somebody. At that point, your glands are in control - and your glands disconnect your brain and your conscience. Waiting until you are almost out of control isn't exactly what the Inventor meant when He told us that each of you should learn to control your own body.
If you want an unforgettable - and expensive object lesson on this, just take the family car out on the local expressway. Take it up to about seventy miles per hour and shift it into reverse! I hope you don't need the car again, and I hope you don't have to go home again. (Obviously, I don't advise this!)

What people would never try to do with a car, they try to do with their bodies all the time. They get it running fast and then suddenly try to reverse it! That is how so many people have gone so much farther than they ever planned to. They never thought ahead about the "top speed" they would allow their body to go in a romantic situation.

Of course, this leads to the most popular teenage question of all time - How far can I go?

The question is too important for a flip answer. Besides, it's the wrong question. To decide your "out of bounds," start with the right question: "How much do I want to have left for my lifetime love?"

When God gave us the desire for physical closeness with the opposite sex, He also gave us a lot of ways to show it - from holding hands to an arm around the shoulder, from a kiss to an embrace to intercourse. Your first line - drawing decision is how much of your love - expressions you want to reserve for your lifetime love. Anything you do with someone else, you are taking away from your life partner as an "exclusive." Don't be too quick to ask, "How far can I go?"

Any decision on your physical boundaries should take into account that sex is a package that includes the parts of your body that are involved in sexual love. The Designer says, "Do not offer the parts of your body to sin, as instruments of wickedness" (Romans 6:13).

The "parts of your body" that are sexual need to be totally reserved for your spouse in marriage. No one else should see or touch those "forever love" parts of you. When you are deciding your line, start there and work your way back, realizing you have a long run to the finish line.

When I was in high school, I had a savings account, briefly. I would get forty or fifty dollars in it, see something I wanted, and promptly crack open my nest egg. I cannot remember one thing I bought with that money. But I can remember what I wanted to buy, but couldn't - a car: "Oh, you didn't have enough money, huh?" Actually, I could have had enough money, but I blew it on all those impulsive, dinky purchases along the way. When the "big one" came along, I didn't have anything left to spend on it. I had spent it on every little thing that came along!

A lot of young people make that mistake with their physical affections. They keep using up their physical expressions of love on every little relationship along the way - and when the "big one" comes along, they have saved very little to spend on him or her.

That's why it is smart to open an "affection savings account." In it are all the ways you can physically express love to someone - from holding hands all the way up the chart to sexual intercourse. Certain expressions you decide right off will never be withdrawn until your wedding night. (Don't forget - a lot of engagements get broken. God says your bodies do not totally belong to each other until those public marriage commitments have been made!) Then, you start to work your way back, deciding certain expressions will not be withdrawn from your account until you are engaged, then farther back along the affection chart to a relationship where you have been going with the same person for several months.

The point is this: You make withdrawals from your account very carefully, and you don't throwaway even the simplest expressions cheaply. Holding hands is not automatic just because you are out with someone -- it has to mean something and only be withdrawn when there is a substantial reason. A kiss is not just a way to say "thank you for spending money on me." It has to mean something important. You cannot afford to waste any of your languages of love!

Why do you need to be so careful about affection withdrawals? Because you want to make it to the investment that really matters - your lifetime love - with a lot left to give.

If you have ever done any competitive running, you'll know the answer to this question - at what point in the race do you need the most resources? At the end! So, the champion learns the importance of something called pacing. It means you do not use up all your air and your energy early in the race. You're going to need the most resources as you get close to the finish line. Think about that when it comes to winning your run to sex at its best - you can't use up too much in the early laps of the race or you will not have enough left to make it to the finish line.
When it comes to expressing physical love, pacing means you make each love expression meaningful and give it away very carefully.

One reason for that caution is a law of romantic relationships: You tend to start in your next relationship where you left off in your last relationship. That's understandable because this time you're sure it's really love. Most times it isn't. But let's say it took you a while to have a kissing-thing in relationship 1, then along comes relationship 2, and you will probably be into that kissing thing right away. You escalate physically in each new relationship or as you keep going with someone longer and longer. The result for thousands of young people who wanted to keep sex special? They never made it to the finish line with the gifts they had meant to save. They gave too much too soon - and ultimately lost it all.

So drawing your physical line is one of the most important decisions you will make as a young person. Don't think of it as "How far can I go?" Think of it as "How much do I want to have left for my lifetime love?" The more you save, the more you will have to spend on a lifetime of love and pleasure.
Step 2: Declare Your Line

No matter where you stand on a football field, you can see where the boundaries are. If you're sitting up in the nosebleed section of the stadium, you can still see exactly where out of bounds is. A line is useless unless the players know where it is. So it's clearly marked in a thick, white line.

People need to know where your boundaries are. Your friends should know, and people you date should know, then you won't have as much pressure from people who are pushing to discover "how far he will go" or "how far she will go." And it will give courage to others either to set a high standard or keep the standard they have set.

Most important, it will strengthen your commitment to be on record with it. It gives you the accountability that helps you keep a commitment when you're pressured or weak. Don't be afraid to tell people that you have decided to keep sex special, you are keeping your gifts so you don't "ruin Christmas," and you have decided "the Inventor knows best."
"Weird!" Maybe you're afraid that's what people will think you are if you declare your line. Well, we need to go back to my son's baseball card collection. He's got some cards that are worth many hundreds of dollars - they're rare rookie cards of some big stars. They are valuable because there are not many of them.

If you are committed to virginity, that does not make you weird. It makes you rare and valuable. In fact, the fewer people there are like you, the more valuable you become.

Step 3: Defend Your Line

You've decided it. You've declared it. Now you have to defend it. Let's face it, there are going to be lots of temptations and opportunities to compromise your line: an awesome guy or girl, lonely times, the fear of losing someone, happy hormones, the fatigue of being in the minority, feelings of love, and so on. You will be pushed and challenged over and over again before your wedding day. So you cannot just decide your boundaries. You have to actively defend them. And how do you do that?
"Flee the evil desires of youth" (2 Timothy 2:22).

Notice the Inventor of sex doesn't say fight those wrong desires. He certainly doesn't say flirt with them. He tells us to flee them! I understand that. If you want to keep sex special, you don't get anywhere near situations where you could stumble. So, defending your line includes some very practical actions.

1. Limit the time you spend alone with someone you care about. The longer you are together alone, the lower your resistance.

2. Do not be in places where you could give too much away. Many people blew their commitment to keep sex special just because they put themselves in a position where it was hard to stop.

3. Fight wrong desires when they are only a thought. Guard what you watch, what you listen to, what you let your mind dwell on. If you let yourself think it, pretty soon you will want it, then do it, then pay for it.

4. Don't push to the point where your mind and body start preparing for intercourse. In other words, do not let yourself get into situations where you awaken desires you cannot satisfy righteously.

By taking practical actions such as these to defend the lines you have drawn around your love, you are reducing the pressure, respecting your Creator; and loving the person you will spend your life with. You are "avoiding" and "controlling" so you can be "reserved for something special."

Step 4: Declare a New Beginning

A future of love and sex at its best begins with a serious commitment to God about your body. I saw a young woman at a conference once with a great shirt that simply said in bold letters, "Property of God." That's really who we are. First, your body is His handmade creation. Second, "Your body is a temple of the Holy Spirit....You are not your own; you were bought at a price. Therefore honor God with your body" (1 Corinthians 6:19-20).

Because God made you, because God paid for you, and because God lives in you, it is only right that you give back to Him the body He gave you. Your body - all of it - is really the "property of God."

So, there is a commitment to your Creator that will launch you in a new beginning. Here it is:

"Lord, I promise You that I will keep my body pure, and I will keep sex special from now until my wedding night."

Would you be willing to make that pledge to God? You can be sure He will give you His supernatural strength to keep it, even when the pressure is on. This commitment marks for you a dear, bold first step on the road to sex at its best - sex God's way.

Many of you have already experienced sex at less than its best - your way. You may be feeling defensive, guilty, or shamed because of your past. And to you a new beginning seems impossible. But hear this: Whatever you've done before today doesn't ever have to matter again.

Many years ago, God communicated incredible good news to some people who had not kept sex special. He identifies some of the people He is talking about as the sexually immoral, adulterers, male prostitutes, homosexual offenders - all people who, maybe like you, had messed up in the sexual area of their lives. Here, then, is God's final word on people with a sexual past: "And that is what some of you were" (1 Corinthians 6:11).

Excuse me? Did God say were? How could that be?

"But you were washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God" (2 Corinthians 6:11).

Three amazing things had happened to these people. First, they had been washed - made clean! Secondly, they had been sanctified - no, not given robes and halos. Sanctified means "reserved for special purposes." These people had been "made special" again, especially when it came to the area of sex. And thirdly, they had been justified - that means they were made okay with God again.

If it could happen to them, it could happen to you! But how can the guilt and scars of a sexual past be removed and healed like this? The answer is all wrapped up in these simple but powerful words - "In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ."

The hope of your new beginning is based totally on Jesus Christ. Why? Because, according to the Bible, "He himself bore our sins in His body on the tree, so that we might die to sins and live for righteousness" (1 Peter 2:24). That means God stands ready to erase every sin from His records in heaven, and you will never bear the guilt of them again. Just like when you take a shower after you've gotten really gross and dirty - you get washed, you get clean, and the dirt is gone!

What a Miracle!

Our daughter was in French class one day, and the teacher was late. So some of the girls started looking through the photos in each other's purses. Since my daughter was in her last year of high school, she had her senior picture with her. Long, naturally curly hair, big smile with those orthodontist-straight teeth, those big blue eyes - everybody thought she looked great!

Then she pulled out her picture from seventh grade. That was a very brave thing to do.

After all, not too many people go around showing folks what they looked like when they were twelve or thirteen. But my daughter laughed along with her friends at her much "geekier" self - hair pulled back, braces from ear-to-ear, eyes partly hidden behind some distinctly undesigner glasses. At that point, Madame French Teacher walked in. She took one look at the two faces and pronounced a two-word verdict on what she saw - "Quelle miracle!" What a miracle!

Our daughter didn't care what people thought about the seventh-grade photo because of one simple fact. She could look at that picture and say, "That was me, but that's not me anymore!"

That is the miracle of being washed and forgiven by Jesus Christ. From the day you put your trust in Him to be your Savior, you can look back at all the sins of your past and say those liberating words - "That was me, but that's not me anymore!"

God is able to do what no therapist or counselor on earth could ever do. He can restore your spiritual and emotional virginity. He can "purify" you from the effects of your sexual mistakes. He can make sex special again for you. Only the Inventor of sex could do that. And He will start that healing process - the moment you claim His forgiveness and make Him the Lord of your body and your sexuality.

So, if you belong to this awesome Savior, whatever you've done before today doesn't ever have to matter again. And if you decide to let the Inventor of love be the Lord of your life, then He will give you what your heart really hopes for - sex at its best.
